The level of control is very good,.Regulation of the activities of heat shock protein genes in yeast cells: possible involvement of heat shock transcriptional factor. We studied the regulation of the HSP3 gene, which is known as a repressor of HSP104. HSP3 is located upstream of HSP104, and the promoter region for HSP3 contains two heat shock elements (HSEs) and a sequence homologous to the heat shock element (HCSE). When HSP104 expression was under control of GAL1 or GAL10 promoter, HSP3 expression was induced by heat shock in a GAL1- or GAL10-dependent fashion, respectively. In contrast, HSP3 expression was induced by heat shock in GAL4 cells. These findings suggest that heat shock transcriptional factor (HSF) may play a key role in HSP3 induction. When HSP104 expression was regulated by the GAL1 promoter, the cell-free transcription/translation system was able to synthesize HSP3 protein. However, when HSP104 expression was regulated by the GAL1 promoter, it was not translated. From these observations, we propose that HSF induces HSP3 gene expression under the control of GAL4 promoter, but not under the control of GAL1 promoter. In addition, under the control of GAL1 promoter, the synthesized HSP3 protein is rapidly degraded in the cell-free transcription/translation system. These observations indicate that the active site on the HSF protein, which regulates the activity of HSP
