Battle Styles: Up to four members. All characters and weapons must be equipped for battle. Battle Styles can be used in combination with special battle strategies in other game modes and time restrictions can vary depending on the number of battle Style slots that are filled. Battle Styles are used based on a character's level to limit damage and make the fight between members more interesting.

Missions: As a member of the Alliance, you can select jobs to increase the combat experience of your militia. The jobs are conducted in the Missions system. There are a total of 98 jobs that vary in difficulty, time limit, and amount of rewards. All jobs are valuable, and while the amount of experience points that are required to progress is fixed, the number of experience points that can be gained by completing a job can vary. For example, the "Seventh Job" requires 15000 points to be completed. Missions can be completed sequentially or in random order, depending on the job that is being completed.

Time Limit: Some bosses have time limits. If you go beyond the time limit, you will automatically fail. Time limits can be split into two, from the time that you start until the time that you need to defeat an enemy. Regardless of which half of the time you're playing, you will receive points based on the number of damage dealt and the number of enemies you defeat during a limited time. Once you have defeated an enemy, you will automatically defeat the next opponent, regardless of its difficulty.

The title was inspired by an article in a newspaper which I came across in Bombay. But mostly it was influenced by the contents of the article: a group of young girls had come from the United States, where, according to the article, it was unheard of for Indian girls to marry Indian boys, and where these girls were even bringing more Indians than their own brothers and husbands from India to marry them. They were very young and were soon to have their first Indian children. According to the article, the young Indian girls were getting disenchanted, even fed up, with their husbands and their homeland, which they felt were backward, uncivilized and oppressive. And they were on their way to their mothers-in-law's -- yes, their mothers-in-law's -- home, and to the States, to resume their American lives. But because of the "Maiyaki" i.e., the sacred "Mai"-fire of the Ahoms of Assam, and of the Biharis and Kashmir, of the Kayahis and Rajputs and the Chhantas of Rajpipla, they dared not go on to their mothers-in-law's homes, but rather were "crushed" by the fire of their past, of their childhood, of their adolescence, and of their first indelible love; as a result, these frightened young girls would end up as shattered children of their mothers-in-law, rather than as American citizens. The young
