We examine the H-bonded ion-dipole complexes formed between the $Xe(2+)$ cation and the $HPO(4)(2-)$ anion ($X = Br, F, I$, and Y) and a variety of anions with various metal ions ($M = Na, K, Rb, Cs, Ag, Cd$, and In). We find two distinct types of H-bonded structures for each of these complexes in the gas phase. The simpler complexes require only the dipole-dipole H-bond to form, while the more complex species have an additional cation-metal ion H-bond, with preferred M-X distances between 2.8 and 3.6 A. These results differ from those obtained for Li-H, Na-H, and K-H bond strengths, where only the dipole-dipole bond is present. Because the M-X bond distances are shorter than those of the M-
