say I have this string: variable = "test.test0.test1.test2.[0] test3.test4.test5.[0]test6.[5]" As you can see there are some variables like [] and []. They could be after test or they could be before it. I want to write a function that checks if there are any punctuation (.) and spaces () and if there are any it should return the index of it, so the function looks like this: def find_parenthesis(variable): for i in range(0, len(variable)): if variable[i] == " ": return 0 elif variable[i] == ".": return 0 Is there a better way of doing bff6bb2d33

Many attempts have been made to solve problems that exist when applying expandable pipe to highway cladding and other applications requiring a substantial amount of expansion. Some known devices utilize spring loaded plungers to expand the pipe in the field and to force it to unseat from a seat prepared at the inner end of the pipe. In order to be sure that the pipe is in its expanded state, it is necessary to visually inspect each connection and to readjust the spring loaded plunger when installing the pipe. The spring loaded plungers have been found to be unsatisfactory in that they do not fully expand the inner diameter of the pipe and stretch and maintain the expanded inner diameter of the pipe. Under these conditions, the distal end of the pipe can only be forced to unseat from the seat after the inner diameter of the pipe has been expanded. The amount of force required to unseat the distal end of the pipe is directly related to the amount of pre-expansion. However, the size and construction of the plunger precludes a substantial amount of pre-expansion. Also, the use of plungers in the field is impractical and time consuming because it is necessary to provide a tool to connect the plunger to the pipe so that it may be expanded. Further, the plunger is generally of a metal construction that does not lend itself to use as a sealant, such as hot melt adhesive, which is also required in highway cladding applications. Other known prior art devices utilize a plurality of large diameter metal balls that are pre-positioned at each end of the pipe. The balls are not expandable so that they do not affect the inner diameter of the pipe. The balls are forced to expand and unseat under the force of a ball retaining cage which
