Vladimir Putin says Russia will retaliate against new U.S. sanctions. The Russian leader also says the new sanctions will affect any equipment that is installed in Crimea and "other places." The comments came as a team of international experts met with Russian President Vladimir Putin in Moscow on Tuesday to discuss implementing the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe's (OSCE) plan for the release of Russian political prisoners. Putin told the experts from the OSCE and a Canadian-based human rights group, the International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights (FHFH), that Russia would not allow the implementation of the OSCE plan in Crimea and elsewhere. "As to Crimea, a decision has already been taken that the legal basis for issuing such orders was not in place," Putin said. "I believe that they would be considered illegal. That is an assessment of our law experts." Putin's comment on the OSCE plan in Crimea came after the organization invited meetings between its experts and Russian officials to discuss ways to implement the plan. "I know that the FSUE, the Security Service of Ukraine and other organizations have said that they are against any such meetings taking place. They have protested to Russia that such a meeting was being planned," Putin said. "But we are ready to hold talks. I believe they [the Ukrainian authorities] would also agree to that. Then we will see what kind of reactions we get from them. They may say, 'We will not go there, but we are ready to answer any questions in the OSCE.'" Putin stressed that he was not threatening any of his partners and that he was simply explaining the consequences of acting upon the OSCE plan. "There is no need to make threats. All I am saying is that we will not allow the OSCE plan to be fulfilled. When all this hysteria dies down, we will find out what consequences will result for anyone who acts on such orders," Putin said. Russia had previously said that it would only allow the release of political prisoners if the OSCE plan was implemented in full. "We have said all along that we will fulfill the commitments," Putin said, "as long as there is not a single prisoner who was released and in fact all the commitments that were made were fulfilled."
